Parents who request admission of a child with disabilities will confer with the principal concerning the extent of the disability. The school does not provide a special education teacher. In cases where it is evident the school cannot provide educational assistance, the school may refuse to admit the student. If it is determined that special needs can possibly be met in a regular classroom setting, parents must sign an agreement stating that it is understood that the school may not be adequately equipped to provide satisfactory results. Students with severe physical handicaps may not be accepted since the building does not provide necessary accommodations.
